

Telefónica announces partnership with Qustodio to deliver next generation online family safety

Telefónica signals commitment to a safer internet in today's multi device world and adds Qustodio's unique service to its customer security portfolio

Madrid, 9th of December, 2014 - Telefónica and Qustodio, the Barcelona based security software vendor, today announced an agreement that will make Qustodio's leading family safety software available to Telefónica customers in different countries. The rollout will start in Spain in the coming weeks.

As part of the deal, Telefónica customers will receive preferential access to Qustodio's complete online family safety suite. The innovative, cloud based service from Qustodio is a cross platform, next generation solution that works on all popular devices and is currently trusted by more than one million families worldwide. Qustodio provides unique and easy to use tools to help families protect, understand and manage internet activity and device usage across all connected devices.

Qustodio's family safety suite includes different apps that allow parents to block harmful content, limit the time their kids spend online, track the child's device or restrict apps or applications in their devices. Through a parent dashboard, parents are able to view and manage the activity of their children from anywhere with daily, weekly or monthly detailed reports on the time spent online and social media.

"Adding Qustodio to our portfolio allows us to offer a full protection suite for kids and teens that goes beyond traditional parental controls and adapts to families' changing needs and requirements in today's multi device mobile world," said Elisa Caballero, Director of Consumer Marketing in Telefónica. "The partnership with Qustodio underlines our commitment to an open but safe internet, one of the guiding principles of our Digital Manifesto."

"Qustodio makes internet safety simple for families. Today's connected home has more than 7 devices; Qustodio helps parents connect the dots and provides the tools they need to manage today's multi device world. The partnership with Telefónica demonstrates a growing demand for next generation internet safety and device supervision solutions in the consumer space." said Eduardo Cruz, CEO and co-founder of Qustodio.

Prior to this agreement, Telefónica had an indirect stake in Qustodio through Amerigo, the international network of technology venture capital funds which is part of Telefónica's Open Future initiative to boosting technological innovation and entrepreneurship around the world.
